I am very happy and excited to be going back to Panamá! Panamá is one of my favorite places around the world. I have been to Panamá in the past and have thoroughly enjoyed my time there. The culture, the atmosphere, the food, the night life, the people... Panamá is a great place to have an international freight forwarders' meeting.

And there are many reasons why.

Panamá is centrally located in Latin America and Panamá City is a bustling business center. It is the border between the North American and South American continents and it goes without saying that the Panamá Canal is the major shipping lane in the Western Hemisphere. It is important for East Asia, the Caribbean, the US Gulf and Atlantic ports and the northern South American ports. Panamá is also noted for its banking and trading industry.

A bit of trivia: The venue, the JW Marriott, is the former Trump Ocean Beach

Hotel. It has a good location and it has top facilities. For those who are also so inclined, the property has a casino attached.

Also, for those of you who have a Latin American focus we are expecting to have a record attendance of companies for the region. And they will be bringing opportunity to the meeting with them as well.

I expect an exciting, electric event with lots of long-term business and relationships to come out of this conference. You want to be there and be included in the success we expect.

I look forward to seeing you in Panamá City!

Best regards,
Gary Dale Cearley

About Panama City, Panama!

Panama is known as “the crossroads of the Americas” and for good reason as it is positioned between North and South America. Most famous for its world changing Panama Canal, Panama is also a vibrant country, rich in tradition and beauty.

For anyone in the freight forwarding business, Panama City is a must see. We will be visiting the The Panama Canal. Be sure not to miss it! The 77 km canal sees annual traffic of over 15,000 vessels each year. In operation since 1914, the canal changed the course of history and increased international trade by immeasurable margins. The Panama Canal is one of the Seven Wonders of the Modern World! Now, while all of that is exciting enough, allow us to enlighten you about all the other treats Panama City provides.

Ancon Hill is the perfect starting point for any visitor. It is a steep 200 meter hill which allows you a beautiful view of Panama City. The road up the hill is a popular hiking and jogging path and there are three great look-out points. It was under US jurisdiction as part of the Panama Canal Zone for much of the 20th century and therefore remained a wilderness unlike most of the surrounding urbanized parts of the city. There you have a genuine chance to see all types of wildlife including sloths, armadillos and deer.

Too tired to make the climb atop Ancon Hill? Then head over to Panama Viejo (Old Panama). This historic site contains the remaining ruins of the first Spanish city on the Pacific coast of the Americas. Founded by Pedro Arias de Avila on 15 August 1519, the city was the starting point of the expeditions that conquered the Incan Empire in Peru. Most of the gold and silver that Spain took from the Incas passed through here. In 1671 the pirate Henry Morgan sacked the city with 1,400 men marching from the Caribbean coast across the jungle and today only the bits and pieces that Morgan left can be admired.

Once back in Panama City, be sure to check out Casca Viejo. Following the destruction of the old city in 1671, Casco Viejo was built as a walled city on a peninsula a few kilometers away from Panama Viejo to protect its settlers against future pirate attacks. As Panama City expanded, the city's elite abandoned Casco Viejo. In recent years, however, it has regained some of its former glory and is a favorite of visitors.

If you want to take a nice and peaceful walk or fancy spending an early morning or afternoon riding a bike, be sure to see the Amador Causeway. The Amador Causeway connects the three islands by the entrance to the Panama Canal to the mainland. From the causeway, there is a terrific view of Panama City, and the Bridge of the Americas. Many Panamanians like to spend their weekends jogging, riding a bicycle or rollerblading down the causeway, or having a meal or drinks in one of the many restaurants and bars on the islands.

As you can see, Panama City has much and more to offer. Experience and relish the luxury of the Trump Ocean Club International Hotel & Tower, view a sunset from Ancon Hill, marvel at mankind's ability to defy nature at the Panama Canal or simply spend your free-time relaxing on a beach.
